The incidence of infection in burn patients was associated with increased in-hospital death, higher charge and prolonged hospital stay. The age of patients and total body surface area of burn are the major risk factors for infection and in-hospital mortality. The complication of smoke inhalation and requirement of escharotomy were associated with higher risk for mortality.